I left a career in horse wrangling to become a civil engineer because the world around me is fascinating and I want to spend my life doing something I love while making my community a better place.

Currently I am in my final year of an undergraduate civil engineering program at Oregon State University. I have done two internships: one in commercial construction and another in site development. My interests include stormwater management and transportation.

After graduation I hope to get a job working in either of those fields--preferably in public service, where I believe I can make the biggest impact.
