

Kate Carone

Kate Carone is a second year Master of Urban and Regional Planning student at Portland State University, specializing in environmental and sustainability planning. She holds a B.A. from Wesleyan University, where she studied U.S. History and Geology.

Having grown up in New Jersey, she fled rampant urban sprawl in 2003 for the greener pastures of Oregon, and now works to preserve the environmental and cultural integrity of her new home.

Before returning to school, Kate worked for Sustainable Industries magazine, Portland's Downspout Disconnection Program, and was an AmeriCorps volunteer. She currently works part time for the City of Portland's Bureau of Environmental Services coordinating the Community Watershed Stewardship Grant Program.

The Lindberg Scholarship has been a great help as she puts herself through school, and she is honored by the Oregon Chapter APWA's support.
